FRIDAY......FEB. 27, 1857.

Focal Affairs. gation has demonstrated that this singular chime is worn about the neck of a sedate-looking old cow, which makes periodical nocturnal visits to that locality. It will be remembered by old inhabitants that, from 1520 to 1526, the neighborhood of Third and Jefferson streets was the general rendezrous of town cattle-indeed, it was taken for granted that the cow had "come up," when she reported herself in that locality in the afternoon. Here it was the Pinks and Charitys, and Pides and Cherrys of several former generations chewed their ends in silence. switched their celestral tails, lowed their evening vespers to their absent bulls, and gave their assembly balls: and, for aught we know, the cow in question is some venerable relic of those glorious old days, who avails herself of the quietude of the midnight hour to revisit the sacred scenes of her happy calf-hood.

We are reminded in this connection of the anecdote of the nervous old-bachelor collector. whose spare, erect form and sedate features are familiar to every man, woman and child, almost in the city even at the present day-for he ha survived the race of cows and other eattle of 1825. He, too, lived in Third street in 1826, and the cow-bell, even of that period (we have a enviosity to know how he regards Dodge's improvement) were too much for his sensitive nature. He submitted to the nightly serenale until "forbearance ecased to be a virtue," and arose from his bed one night in sheer desperation, 190k down his rifle, and, rushing to the street, shot and killed a favorite cow which wore one of the larger class of bells. With some show of sagacity the animals after that sought a wider range, and from that time Third street lost its reputation among the cows and la fers of this region. Who knows but that the cowardly visitor of the present day, is the spirit of the unfortunate animal which fell a martyr to the nervous debicity of our old friend, the coliector in 1526.

Unless the above is satisfactory, we are utterly unable to divine the object of these hadin visits, as we are not aware of the existence of any green sas in the neighborhood. Wi commend this wandering cow to the attention of the Evening Bulletin.
